Competing at any level of any sport comes with its share of mental stressors, and at the highest levels of equestrian sport, the psychological component can make or break a rider's ability to perform their best.

Event attendees will hear first-hand from riders - including World Equestrian Games team show jumping gold medalist Adrienne Sternlicht and Olympic bronze medalist and number five ranked dressage rider in the world Kasey Perry-Glass, alongside moderator and Mental Skills Coach Tonya Johnston, MA - on topics including handling stress and nerves, building confidence, finding a routine, imposter syndrome, being present, surrounding themselves with the right people, and more.

Those in attendance will also have the opportunity to ask their own questions regarding the mental and emotional challenges of the sport during this panel and open discussion.

About the Equine Tech Collaborative

The Equine Tech Collaborative was formed in 2017 by founding companies BarnManager, Equo, Jumpfax, and StableGuard. Each of the founders was looking for ways to grow their startups on a startup budget and to continue to develop their offerings to ensure that they were providing the best possible solutions for those within the equestrian industry.

Through conversation, collaboration, and coordination, these four founders created a group to share experiences and work together toward shared goals for the betterment of the lives of equestrians everywhere. Today, the Equine Tech Collab has grown and continues to be strengthened by the innovation that occurs when you bring people from different backgrounds and areas of expertise together and through the addition of new partners including Electronic Vet, Epona Exchange, Etalon Diagnostics, and Event Clinics.
