Cassandra Kahle Scores First Big Professional Title

On October 2, Cassandra Kahle of Langley, British Columbia, became the first Canadian to win the richest class of the Capital Challenge Horse Show, the $30,000 World Championship Hunter Rider (WCHR) Professional Challenge, in Upper Marlboro, MD.

Kahle, who grew up riding with her mother, Natasha Brash of Silver Fox Horse Sales in Langley, guided Monday Balous, owned by Don Stewart and Redfield Farm, to the win. "He really has an amazing jump," Kahle said. "He really uses his body and neck well, and he's got such an easygoing character. The rhythm of his canter makes everything very easy. He's straight, he lands both leads, there's really not a whole lot to do on him!"

Kahle has worked for Emil Spadone of Redfield Farm in Califon, NJ, for six years and rides hunters and jumpers up to the grand prix level for him. This was her first time competing in the prestigious WCHR Professional Challenge class, and she defeated top U.S. hunter riders such as Scott Stewart, Tori Colvin, and Liz Boyd.

"Everyone here has been here before, and they're amazing riders," she said. "I think maybe that helped take the pressure off a little bit. I could just go in and have a good time and enjoy being in this calibre of class. It's not very often that you get horses like this to ride. That's what I tried to think about going in, and I'm thrilled it worked out like this."

Cassandra Kahle became the first Canadian rider to win the $30,000 WCHR Professional Challenge, riding Monday Balous to the title at the Capital Challenge Horse Show.
